We have seldom said anything that gives more satisfaction than the O-Cedar Polish Mop. Every woman who has ever used one is enthusiastic in her praise. And no wonder, for it saves hard work, time and money.

You know the hard work of dusting, cleaning and polishing floors. It is easy, simple and quick with the O-Cedar Polish Mop. This mop is treated with the famous O-Cedar Polish and it collects all the dirt from the floor, and at the same time gives it a hard, lasting polish. No hard rubbing, no stooping or bending. You just go over the floor once.

And with the same mop you can dust everywhere. All the hard-to-get-at places, the tops of doors, the mouldings, the stairs and bannisters. Under the bed and stoves, in fact, every place.

Guaranteed Satisfaction or Money Refunded.

The O-Cedar Polish Mop, complete, sells for $1.50 and with this distinct understanding, that you can try it for two days and at the end of that time, if you are not perfectly satisfied with it your money will be instantly refunded. We invite you to try one.

Rumor has it that the firm of W. Sturtz and Co., lumber merchants have disposed of their yard here.

Mrs. W. B. Edward, of Calgary, renewed acquaintances in the town during the past week.

Mrs. S. Willis is spending a few days with friends and relations in Innisfail.

Dan McArthur is recovering from his accident nicely, and is expecting starting work again minus the ends of two fingers about Monday next.

Mrs. Edwards, mother of Mrs. A. G. Birch, left on Wednesday for Calgary after spending several weeks with her daughter here.

R. Millan, of Crossfield, is expected to leave town the first of next week for Drumheller, where he is going teaming on a railroad outfit.

Mrs. S. Willis is leaving for the Old Country on the 15th inst., on an extensive business trip and is likely to be away about three months time.

W. B. Edward was a business visitor in town for two or three days this week, he is shipping a carload of hogs to the city on Friday.

C. Sturrock and V. Fisher are now in the implement business as partners at the old stand.

Treco Bros. shipped out last week a carload of horses north, and have shipped in this week two pure bred Percheron mares from France.

KYANIZE your home and so make it beautiful. Get it at McRory's.

Mr. E. E. Edwards, assistant to Mr. Gilchrist, met with a very painful accident at the local depot, whilst taking baggage from an express car last Friday evening, a box weighing some twelve hundred pounds falling on his right hand necessitating medical attention. We are pleased to hear that he is improving nicely.

See the FIRECO Stove attachment at W. McRory and Sons.

Mr. J. T. Boucher, of Bottrel, is having a sale of horses, cows, heifers, registered bull, etc., also the whole stock of new farming implements. The sale takes place at ten a.m. on Tuesday, April 14th; U. S. Brown is the auctioneer.

Messmates Stow & Lynch DeLong, Milliners in Carsairs, will not be able to come to Crossfield until after Easter. However they will pay fare to any lady or ladies coming to Carsairs for their Easter Hat. This will hold good only before Easter.

Everyone must have felt that a cheerful friend is like a sunny day, which sheds its brightness on all around; and most of us can as we choose make this world a palace or a prison.

CROSSFIELD LOCAL & GENERAL.

The ball given under the auspices of the Crossfield Orchestra last Friday evening passed off very successfully and although the gathering was not much of a crush it was quite large enough for the size of the hall, about thirty couples being in attendance. Everyone expressed themselves as having a most enjoyable time. Mine host Myers catered and is to be complimented upon the spread.

The Duke of Sutherland, who succeeded to his father's estates on the latter's death about a year ago, will visit the Sutherland colony near Brooks this summer. This will be the first visit of the new duke to his estates in the west, and the town of Brooks will give him a reception.

An exchange says, it is astonishing how some minds will hold out under continual drafts. It says a female friend of its acquaintance has been giving a piece of her mind to most everybody for forty years, and yet the original plant remains.

A. M. Donald has got his railroad contracting outfit in good working order and is proceeding north of Edmonton the first of next week to look over a contract he has in view.

30 Days Hard for Brown.

J. E. Brown, who claimed he was from Olds, was brought before Magistrates Boyle and Davie on Wednesday evening, charged with uttering a cheque for $10.00 and cashed at the Alberta Hotel, without having the means to cover it. Prisoner was arrested at Castors. He was sentenced to 30 days hard labor.

W. Renwick Sent to Gaol.

Last Monday evening W. Renwick appeared before Justice of the Peace R. L. Boyle for an infraction of the Liquor Act, having supplied liquor to an interdicted person. The evidence conclusively proved the fact, and Magistrate Boyle sentenced him to a fine of $200.00, or in default of payment six months in gaol. The fine not having been paid he was taken north to Fort Saskatchewan Gaol on Tuesday morning's train.

This may seem like a rather severe punishment, but this breach of the law should be severely dealt with, and this no doubt will have a good effect in this district.

Paint the outside of the house with SWP, Sherwin-Williams Paint (Prepared), made of pure lead, pure zinc, pure linseed oil and the necessary coloring pigments and driers. Saves you money because it covers most, lasts longest and looks best.

On the steps and porch floors use Sherwin-Williams Porch Floor Paint. Withstands the weather and frequent scrubbing.

Varnish the half-floor and stairs with S-W Mar-not—tough and elastic under foot. No better floor varnish made.

For bedroom walls use S-W Flat-tone, a flat finish oil paint for walls and woodwork. Can be repeatedly washed with soap and water. Twenty-four artistic shades, suitable for decorating the living room, the dining room, and the bed rooms. Flat-Tone is a durable and sanitary finish.

Bedroom furniture and woodwork can be refinished with S-W Floor or S-W Family Paint. Floorline gives a stained and varnished finish resembling expensive hardwoods. S-W Family Paint produces a bright, gloss finish in attractive colors.

Give the kitchen floor a smooth, hard-wearing coat of S-W Inside Floor Paint, easy to keep clean. S-W Family Paint will help keep cupboards and woodwork fresh and sweet.

Heloise Durand

She Became an Object For National Protection

By MARIAN KNOX

The Riviera is a favorite place for the aristocracy of Europe to winter, especially Russians who are often glad to escape the cold and ice and cold winds of that bleak empire. Nice, Mentone and other points on the Mediterranean sea are during the months of December, January and February thronged with people, who find there about the middle of the nineteenth century an American girl gifted not only with beauty, but a remarkable historical genius, seventeen years old, was visiting the Riviera with her mother, and brother. One afternoon while walking on the promenade on the Mediterranean shore the party met among the throng of idlers a tall, handsome young man whose light hair and blue eyes marked him for a blue-ribbon. As he passed the girl his gaze was fixed upon her with admiration, when she lowered her gaze to the ground.

These were two real personages, but since this is a story rather than an account, we will call the girl Heloise Durand, and the young Count Stremoff, a member of one of the most aristocratic families of St. Petersburg. He lost no time in discovering who was the girl of such striking appearance he had met and was looking for some one to introduce her.

He was successful in making her acquaintance, and then began a courtship which would likely have but one ending for so young a girl courted by a nobleman handsome as a picture and possessing the most charming manner, a frank, open frankness, a frank and a disengaging countenance. But his most effective work is done under the guise of beauty. The two listened to the music to be enjoyed at Nice, promenaded on the sea walk and engaged in quiet walks on the blue waters of the Mediterranean. And all this while the count was pouring into her ear his tale of love.

The Durands were astounded that the count's position was not claimed it to be, and since Heloise was of an age when a girl is easily won she was not

THE DURANDS IN PARIS AT THE ALTAR, likely to result in extreme fascination. European society has been full of unprincipled men whose main object is the conquest of women, but it does not appear that this American has failed so culpably to observe the etiquette resulting from the election of young persons of opposite sex which has always been in vogue in Europe. The count, by asking for the hand of Miss Durand, seemed to indicate his intentions were perfectly honorable.

One precaution, however, was not taken. While the Durands had evidence that Count Stremoff held the wife, the mother and the wealth to which he aspired, they had no information as to his character. The rock on which so many American girls abroad, in making matrimonial contracts, have been wrecked. One idea as to the position of the man they want, they are not likely to pay any attention to what he is in himself. The catalogue of Americans who have married titled foreigners to their cost is large, and still it grows.

In Paris, the count, as in Russia, any marriage he might make was amenable to Russian law. That law explicitly required that a marriage should take place in the Russian or Greek church, and in accordance with its church on the Riviera, and it was arranged that the couple should go to the consulate. The wedding took place, putting Miss Durand in the paradesque position of being Stremoff's legal wife, while he was not her legal husband.

It was arranged that the Durands and the count should go to Paris where there was a Greek church, and they could be married according to the law of Greece. Stremoff preceded the others. It was late when he reached when no marriage can be celebrated in the Greek church. This the count doubtless knew. Nevertheless, he departed, ostensibly to make preparations for the celebration of the wedding.

When the Durands reached Paris they discovered that in fact the stages making Heloise the legal wife of Russia as well as other countries could not be completed for some weeks. And now the count showed his true character. He used all his persuasive powers to induce the young girl to go away with him, swearing her that she was his legal wife.

"Go with me," he pleaded, "to Russia, where we can be married according to the requirements of the Greek church, where I will be at home and where my family may attend the wedding. Heloise must pass dreary weeks waiting, while there can be nuptials."

This was not true. No couple could be married in the Greek church during Lent in Russia any more than in Paris. The girl protested, but in vain. Stremoff was becoming more and more fearing of his interests not being known to keep her secret longer. Heloise told her mother of the计.

At the same time rumors came to Mrs. Durand that Stremoff was a rake and a浪子. Furthermore, the Durands were relatives of the American minister at St. Petersburg, and the mother wrote him with reference to the marriage and the rumors she had heard.

The American minister wrote her to confirm the facts.

The fact of having the influence of one of so much importance at the Russian court makes this episode in real life one of the remarkable stories of the world. Mrs. Durand and the young bride were received with the greatest of honor whatever. Furthermore, the Durands were relatives of the American minister at St. Petersburg, and the mother wrote him with reference to the marriage and the rumors she had heard.

Stremoff, while drawing a young American girl into his toils had no idea that she had the opportunity of calling to her aid the power of the United States.

Her cousin, the ambassador, WALTER HINES PAGE, tells us in his diary that "while I'm poundin' on' my pavement after midnight there's nothin' I like better to hear out 't' is a-a-a that a good healthy white."

At the Savage club dinner the other evening he said, "On our side of the Atlantic we speak English better than you do and more of it!" The American, as Charles Dickens told us, is "cracked up."

wanting to escape, if any, he might attempt to escape what was to be forced upon him. To all, especially the bride, such service seemed interminable. But at last the bridegroom, who had become tired as well as really the Countess Stremoff. The bride and groom parted at the door of the church, never to meet again.

The Durands fled from Russia at once for by the time they left the Russian impress, best. In every way ill treat his wife if he can get his hands on her. They reached the border the next day and were safe.

It is not known whether he continued his villainy or was sobered by this one experience, is not known. The wedding took place more than half a century ago, and his name, that discovered in fact, in the stages making Heloise the legal wife of Russia as well as other countries could not be completed for some weeks. And now the count showed his true character. He used all his persuasive powers to induce the young girl to go away with him, swearing her that she was his legal wife.

She Would Get Even.

Tired out with an afternoon's shopping, the mother sat back in her easy chair to recite in detail the afternoon's experiences to a sympathetic home circle.

"And to cap it all I met that horrid Anne Green, and she was very impudent to me as usual," she wailed.

"Then you think," sympathetically added one of the girls, "she must have had intend to do to make Miss Durand his dupe, refused to go to Warsaw or be married."

And here comes in among the wrongs that may be perpetrated by despotic parents, a case of robbery. A nobleman, no other name being at hand of a scoundrel, would have been ready to commit this rascal to do justice to the girl he had intended to win for the purpose of deposing her when won, except the case of Heloise.

One day Stremoff received an official document from the car ordering him to go to Warsaw and complete the marriage that he had begun on the Riviera. An order from the autocar of the Countess Stremoff, which he was not to be despised, one who by a woman can send persons, without the semblance of a trial, to work in the dredged canals in Siberia is not likely to be obeyed. And so he directs a man to do justice to a wife. And the wronged girl had behind her the power of the great American republic to re-ensure the case.

Count Stremoff dared not disobey his sovereign's order, and at the appointed hour he called the church, the altar rail, black dress, attended by her father, her mother, and the groom's brother, who had been very kind to the injured girl. The defense was that Mr. Roycroft, a lawyer, had concealed that if the villain refused to give his daughter he would be sent to prevent his working any more mischief.

Mr. Roycroft, the attorney at the altar rail. From this dramatic scene, certainly as no more unique one, ever was enacted in a church. The groom was simply passing through a form in obedience to the will of one who had been the master of his life and death, the "wife" was a legal wife. But for her it was a terrible crisis, knowing as she did that her father was dead and that the slighted disposition of the man he had come to trust the ceremony would be turned into a tragedy. She must have prayed silently before the altar that she might be spared a bloody ending of her miseries.

The defense was that Mr. Roycroft, a lawyer, had concealed that if the villain refused to give his daughter he would be sent to prevent his working any more mischief.

The groom was simply passing through a form in obedience to the will of one who had been the master of his life and death, the "wife" was a legal wife. But for her it was a terrible crisis, knowing as she did that her father was dead and that the slighted disposition of the man he had come to trust the ceremony would be turned into a tragedy. She must have prayed silently before the altar that she might be spared a bloody ending of her miseries.

A Lesson In Giving

It Came Near Breaking an Engagement.

By CECILIA A. LOIZEAUX.

"Of course I like you to be sympathetic and generous—it's all a part of you. But I do wish you could be made to see the evils of such recklessly indiscriminate giving," said Howard.

They had been passing a few hours together, who had stopped off arm-in-arm from their walk with his monotonous white face for colas. Howard, after a sharp glance, had brushed away the extended hand and taken Beth's arm to guide her past. But with an effort of will, she had turned back to empty into the man's hand all the change in her little gold mesh purse.

"My giving is not indiscriminate. That man was maimed—he had only one arm and the other one was trembling from the effects of his stroke," answered Beth, with some heat.

"My dear, that man's hand is trembling from drink, and as likely as not he has another arm under his coat. You don't realize what frauds these people are before they begin to ask for your aid, that it's the principle of the thing that is wrong? The money you give so carelessly might better be used for people who really need it, and you seldom find that kind begging on the streets."

They had reached Beth's home by this time, and, as usual, Howard went in with her for the afternoon tea Beth always made by the living room fire.

When they entered the house the subject was not coming, though they both had expected it. Beth sat at the little table silently. There was an angry light in her eyes. She told herself that Howard was not quite what she had thought him.

Howard was about to go to the front door when Beth and Uncle John, with whom she had lived since the death of her parents, came in and went up the stairs to his room. Howard settled back into his chair for he liked Beth's uncle, who was a jolly old man. But Beth looked unaccountably nervous, fidgeted with the chair and set the ball for some hot water. She jumped guiltily as an irate voice from upstairs called, "Beth!"

"Yes, uncle, what is it?" she called back, going to the foot of the stairs.

"What is it?" he asked. "I have my smoking jacket and those black slippers? I can't find them anywhere, and I left them right here in my room. I wish Mary wouldn't have cleaned up streaks."

Beth darted a gleam glint at Howard and then ran up the stairs. She spoke so softly that Howard could not hear what she said, but her uncle's voice was far-reaching, and the young man listened shamelessly, for he guessed what was the matter. Now he gazed silently to the floor, as the one-sided conversation went on.

"What the deuce!" he was fairly roaring. "That jacket is the only one I've ever had that's any good. And I look like a peeled onion in that purple shirt, and you know it." Then the voice was silent. Then the voice was somewhat softer tones went on:

"Well, if you can't rest unless you're giving things away and my things are attractive to you, just make it a point to ask me what I can get along without. Well, then, give me my old slippers."

Another silence.

"Do you mean to tell me that you gave away that pair of slippers that I've been breaking in to you? And I just got adjusted to my feet?" By now Uncle John had got those.

"Well, he didn't need them as bad as I do. He couldn't feed my smoking jacket to a starving baby, and those slippers will fit his sick wife to perfection, I suppose. What else did you give him?"

Another silence—then a snort.

"There! That's enough! Don't tell me too much at once." I'm liable to get mad." When he was through, he sat on the sofa, and Howard circled to the farthest window and turned innocently around to speak to Beth as if nothing had happened. Her face was red and her eyes wet.

"Uncle's cross tonight," she said airily. "—he acts as if he had lost something important and agent, but began to make fresh tears, and a minute or two her uncle appeared in the doorway. He had on a purple silk jacket and a purple cap stuck jauntily over one ear on his bald head.

"Look like a silly old timer, don't it?" the old man said as he carefully lowered his heavy figure into his easy chair and stuck his feet out before him. "Your turn will come. You'll live to see your best shoes tripping down the street, and you'll meet your hair and coat and trousers strolling about the city until you won't know whether you're drowning or whether there are two of you."

Howard was a little uneasy. He looked at Beth and smiled, and she looked back coldly, thinking that she read "I told you so" in his face. She disengaged with the help given him to his tea and did not come down again until Howard was gone and dinner was ready.

The next morning Beth spent in overselling all her clothes, piling into a great heap on the floor everything that she did not like or was a little soiled. And on the top she put a note pinned to the bottom of each. It was a little dirty around the edge of the skirt, though that was not why she added it to the pile.

"That's mine at any rate," she said to herself as she gathered the garments into a large armful and carried them to the basement, where she bestowed them upon the new laundry. That woman left in a hurry before her day's work was done, fearing that Beth would change her mind.

Two days later Howard started up to Beth's in his car to take her to the drawing room. She was dressed with her over the phone. What was his amazement, therefore, as he drove slowly through the downtown streets to see Beth in her gray walking suit and toque, which she had chosen herself when it was fitted. Mrs. Forster will remember?" But when we went to the drawing room Mrs. Forster could not remember, and Forster called down wrath on her and himself. The next morning the post brought me a note from him at breakfast time, which contained only the name Henry Thomsen Buckle.

ENGLAND'S BLACK MEN.

They Are Remnants of the Ancient Blue Painted Britons.

Practically every Englishman is Anglo-Saxon by blood, but there are, according to scientists, one or two corners in England where there are colonies directly descended from the ancient Britons. These are the men who, according to the history books, inhabited England before the Anglo-Saxons killed them off.

"I'm going to speak about this," he said, clearing his throat; "but if you must go slumbering I insist that you take some escort, with you."

If Howard will not. I was amazed to see you down there among the secondhand stores in that part of town. You are a very fine looking man. I don't care why you got it. It is not safe nor respectable, either."

Beth was staring at him open-eyed. "I was staring at him open-eyed. "I was not down there this afternoon," she said indignantly.

The doorknob rang, and Howard was about to go to answer it when the maid. He came up to the table and put a little packet down on the cloth.

"Beth," he said, "you don't mean it, do you? I can't let you break our engagement like this without telling me who is the mater. What have I done?"

Beth stood up, looking like a fawn at her bay. Her eyes were dilated with fear, her hands clenched. She looked from Howard to the maid, but did not speak. Her uncle went over to her and put his arm around her.

"What is it, little girl?" he said as one would speak to a child.

Beth began to sob and then laugh. "It's all so funny," she sobbed. "I guess it's mostly my fault. I gave that jacket to the maid. I guess I must have given it to her afterward that I had given it by your house. Don't you see, dear?"

But this time he came around behind the chair, too, and Uncle John sat down and pretended to eat his cold dinner.

When Uncle John reached home the next night he found the old smoking jacket and slippers laid out for him. He smelled the sulphur with which they had been fumigated and asked no questions, but he did wonder why he had to tell where they had come from. He had seen Beth and Howard in the big green car steering toward the secondhand district in the morning, and he had his hopes aroused.

"I guess it's all right," he said. "I guess it's mostly my fault. I gave that jacket to the maid. I guess I must have given it to her afterward that I had given it by your house. Don't you see, dear?"

THE WINDOW AT THE WHITE CAT

Fred closed the house with his usual care. Then he went up to bed.

My bedroom was over the library, and Mrs. Butler and Margery's room had been directly opposite mine. I lay down. Fred and Edith slept in the nursery wing, so they would be near the children. In the square upper floor there was a little alcove, tucked away in a deep faint alcove, with a lamp and some comfortable chairs.

I was awakened by the pungent acrid smell of smoke. My cigarette had dropped from my hand lightning and was still smoldering with cigarette, determined to burn to the end. In so doing it had fired my bed, the rug under the bed and pretty nearly the main door. I sprang out of bed, ran across the room to get a bucket of water to put it out without rousing the house. Then I found amid the wreckage and looked ruefully at Edith's pretty dress.

Three pitchers of water on the bed had made it an impossible couch. I put on a dressing gown and with a blanket over my arm, I went out into the hall and took a bucket of water to get the water out of the floor. I stood on the floorboards in the hall just outside, and as quietly as I could I put a screen around it and settled down for a nap.

I was awakened by the touch of a hand on my face. I started, I thought, and the hand was jerked away. I am not sure; I was still drowsy. The hall was dark and quiet. Well, I thought, I can't stand it here. It must be early a vivid dream. Then I noticed a heavy, sweetish odor in the air. The smell was almost nauseating. For some reason I could not identify it, it was similar to certain odors with certain events—I found myself recalling the time I had a wisdom tooth taken out and that when I came round I found myself sitting out of the dentist's chair and the latter had a black eye. Then suddenly I knew. The sickly odor was chloroform.

I had the light on a moment and was rattling at Margery's door. It was locked, and I got no answer. A pale light shone over the transom. But the room was completely quiet beyond the door. I went to Mrs. Butler's door next. It was unlocked and partly open. One glance at the empty bed and the confusion of the place and I rushed without ceremony

FINGER NAILS DROPPED OFF

Skin Beneath Lifeless. Fingers Painful. Sleepless Nights. Used Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. Complaint Gone.

To Agriculturist St., Halifax, N. S.—Some time ago my finger nails began to drop off, the result was it became lead poisoning. The nail themselves were brittle and dry, the skin beneath them was lifeless. The fingers were excessively painful causing sleepless nights. It was treated about three months and the nails grew again but were not strong. The sides of the fingers and then fell off again.

"Having heard a great deal of Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment I sent a sample of both to the top of their healing power and after using them for a short while I was surprised to feel fingers much less sore and dry. The skin beneath them was lifeless again; the fingers which had grown under the old nails disappeared and then new strong nails formed. This terrible hand had started about three months ago and continued until now. Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment yet after using same for three months my finger nails had grown strong and continued until now." (Signed) Fred, Boston, N. S., 12-12.

through the connecting door into Margery's room.

The atmosphere was reeking with chloroform. The girl was in bed, apparently sleeping quietly. One arm was thrown over her head, and the other lay relaxed on the white covers. A folded towel had been laid across her face, and when I jerked it away saw she was breathing very slowly and intermittently, with her eyes partly open and fixed.

I threw up all the windows before I roused the family downstairs and saw the silver was intact and the back door was open. The front door was open, and I was put out in the hall. Not until the doctor came out to me and said she was better and would I go home did I come out of my stupor. The chance of doing something, anything, made me determine to make the effort. They still speak of that effort.

It was Edith who brought Mrs. Butler to my mind. Fred had maintained that she had been better the instant after I had been in some other set or corner of the upper floor. It was I who found her, after all, lying full length on the grass in the middle garden, with her head in the bushes. She was in deep faint and was a much more difficult patient than Margery.

We could get no story from either of them that night, but it was a strange occurrence.

That night I lay in bed with out robes as a protection. If Margery knew or suspected the reason for the outrage she remained to say.

Next morning the occurrence put her into hysteria. It was Fred who put forth the most startling theory of the lot.

By George! she said the next morning when we had failed to find tracks in the yard and Edith had reported every silver spoon in its place, by George, it wouldn't be like him to do such a thing.

There wasn't anything & hysterical woman won't do to rouse your interest in her if it begins to faze. How could she get out of the house?

It was in the dead of night when it was locked inside and outside. I tell you she opened it herself.

I did not like to force Margery's confidence, but I believed that the outrage was directly for the purpose of searching her room, for perhaps persons that had been in there.

She could have known enough by memory to tell a semi-concocted story, in which she claimed that two men had come in from a westward roof and tried to break in.

Returning a Favor

It's going to be war to the knife, declared the suburban man, who was faced with the problem of getting his wife to return a favor.

Why? I asked the friend.

Why, Blinks sent me a box of axle grease and advised me to use it on my lawn mower.

Well, I sent it back and told him to use it in his daughter's voice.

The janitor wants ten dollars more per month, or he'll leave. I hate to part with the money, but we can't spare him.

The senior partner disappeared and returned in a few moments.

If it all right, he said, I have satisfied him, and it didn't cost us anything.

How's that?

The janitor is now the superintendent.

Good work! declared the junior partner. But why didn't you make him superintendent of the place?

Blinks, answered the senior member, knew I'd want a promotion eventually. Every man wants a promotion sometime, and to my mind, a good man deserves one.

How to Keep the Dairy From Paying.

1. Don't have your stables too tight and warm. Blanket your cows with corn meal and help your feed dealer. He will appreciate your thoughtfulness.

2. When the cows freshen give them lots of timothy hay. Timothy hay is good for race horses and it may help the cows to get away from the dog.

3. Be sure to keep a dog and if your herd is very large, keep two dogs. They will warn the cows up after filling their stomachs full of ice water.

4. Don't build a silo. They cost too much, and besides the cows might eat up all their feed and there would be nothing for bedding.

5. Don't weigh each cow's milk. To know how much milk each cow gave in a year might set you to thinking and that is dangerous.

6. A straw stack is a good thing to dry cows. It helps them to pass away the time.

7. Never curry the cows off. It might "tickle them to death."

8. Don't have too many windows in the stable. The hired man might like it too well and want to stay another year.

9. If the cows still pay a dividend buy another dog.

The advice imprinted in the above paragraphs, appearing in the current "Hoards Dairymen," might with a few alterations to suit local conditions, furnish food for thought to some Alberta dairymen.

WOMEN'S INSTITUTE.

GOOD BALANCE WHEEL FOR GRAIN CULTIVATION

Renewed activity in Industrial Enterprises in Western Canada is a Healthy Sign

From various centres in Western Canada come accounts of renewed activity in industrial enterprises.

Edmonton the Great West Government Company reports that its factory in 1913 doubled its business as against 1912. The firm now employs 160 men and women and has a yearly pay roll of $75,000. Four travelling salesmen are on the road in Western Canada. The lines at present are shirts, overalls, pants and workman's clothing.

Mr. J. B. Griffith, Secretary-Treasurer of the Edmonton Portland Cement Company says that plans are being made to enlarge the 1500 barrel plant at Marathon. After installing a fourth kiln with a capacity of 500 barrels a day. The plant will be overhauled during the winter months. The company has 20,000 barrels of cement on hand with orders for delivery during the next 90 days.

In Saskatoon the plant of the Northland Milling Co. at Factoria is being equipped with machinery of the most modern type, costing about $50,000.
